Thank you all for your Region's active participation in this week's PFAS National Leadership Summit, and for so many of you taking the time to participate in person. The engagement from the Regions was critical in making this such a successful event. It will be important for us to maintain momentum towards development of a national PFAS management plan, and one of our immediate next steps is for EPA to visit locations where we can engage directly with communities impacted by PFAS to learn more about the ways the agency can best support the work that's being done at the state, local and tribal levels. These engagements will play a key role on setting priorities within our national PFAS management plan, to be completed later this year.
